

...brought down. As per reports, the district police stated that it was built on government land. Police claimed that two Bangladeshi nationals linked to the terror groups had found shelter in the madrasa.

Responding to the August demolition, state chief minister Himanta Biswa Sarma told media persons that these institutions were being used as "a hub for terrorism".

Claiming that "jihadi" elements "have infiltrated and taken cover under the guise of imams", the chief minister told Times of India, "We have been evicting madrasas wherever we have received complaints of fundamentalists." A week before the madrasa in Barpeta was demolished, Sarma announced that imams entering the state from other states would have to register themselves in a government portal and inform the local police about their arrival.

Earlier that day, state director general of police Anil Kumar Mahanta met Maulana Abdul Qadir, secretary of the Tazim Council which runs most of the madrasas in Assam. In that meeting, Qadir handed over a directory of all the madrasas run by the Council.

"Going forward, we want to create a master directory of all the madrasas for their nefarious fundamentalist purposes," the DGP tweeted.

Since Sarma has taken over the state's chief minister's chair, as many as 700 state-funded madrasas run by an education board have also been shut down.
